the classic love story, two strangers gaze across a crowded room and instantly know they are made tor each other.

But how can two persons who have never met fall in love at first glance? A Los Angeles neurochemist, Dr. Eugene Roberts, has offered a possible explanation which is part of his theory

A neuron is another name for a nerve cell and millions of neurons, linked together into circuits, are what make things happen in the body. The command neuron's job, as Dr. Roberts sees, it, is to control the release of a specific function which has been programmed into the circuit

According to this view, circuits exist in the brain for anger, love, hate, fear, anxiety and other emotions, as well as other forms of behavior, Each behavior is controlled by a composite of inter-

The resulting chemical and electrical activity of neurons was read by the brain as love. The crucial structure in this chain of activities is the command neuron. As Dr. Roberts sees it, nothing happens until the command neuron lets it happen.

Neurophysiologists used to explain brain activity solely in terms of neuron excitation. Dr. Roberts's theory relies heavily on the notion that inhibition, the opposite of excitation, is just as important and that normal brain activity relies on a coordinated interplay of excitation and inhibi-

A constitutional conference ordered by Emperor Haile Sclassic. to rewrite the country's basic laws and transfer some of his absolute power to parliament, met for the second time to elect new members. The conference held its first meeting last week. It must report its recommendations to the emperor within six months.

Commission Meets

A special commission formed by the government to probe alleged corruption among former cabinet ministers also held its first meet-ing today to set ground rules for its inquiry. The armed forces had demanded the establishment of such a body at the height of a crisis which has rocked Ethiopia for more than a month.

The army, at one threatened to seize power if the commission did not perform as the army wanted and bring former ministers to trial.

Police broke up a demonstration by about 300 students outside the office of Premier Endalkatchew Makonnen. The students waved banners, carried imitation gallows and effigies and demanded the premier's resignation.

Police later broke up another group of students who refused to attend classes and hurled stones at school buildings. Several persons were injured in the clashes.

University students later called for a total boycott of all classes and lectures until further notice.

A report from the institute. now under consideration by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, recommends that psychosurgery be regarded as experimental and, therefore, to be done under only the most rigorously defined and controlled circumstances. The report, signed by the institute's director. Dr. Bertram Brown, also recommends that no psychosurgery be performed on persons who are involuntarily confined or are incapable of giveither age or mental condition. The institute's staff prepared the report after consultation with outside specialists and laymen. Psychosurgery has become the subject of intense public controversy in recent years. For and Against Opponents argue that psychosurgery is an extreme and destructive attempt at controlling human behavior, involving at least partial death of the personality.

Proponents argue that it offers the only hope for ameliorating some extreme disturbances in behavior, such as cases of upcontrollable violence. There are no reliable statistics on the number of such operations done in the United States. The yearly total is thought to be somewhere between 100 and 1,000. Experts say few, if any, of these operations would meet the strict criteria proposed in the

A few items of clear historical interest were included, such as the briefing materials that were repared for Mr. Nixon before his trips as vice-president to the Par East, Central America, South America, Austria, Britain and the Soviet Union.

The Associated Press reported on Friday that the staff of the Joint Committee, which has been examining every aspect of Mr. Nixon's tax returns for 1969 through 1972, had found that the donated papers were overvalued at $576,000. The appraisal had been made by Ralph Newman of Chicago, a professional appraiser who has also valued the papers of many other public

Ad Man in the Courtroom

Research Analysis and the Mitchell Jury

NEW YORK, April 1 (NYT).-For the first six weeks of the conspiracy trial of former Attorney General John Mitchell and former Commerce Secretary Maurice Stans, a man has been sitting in the spectator section courtroom peering at 12 persons he has never met but whom he helped to select as

The silent observer is Marty Herbst, who is neither a psychiatrist, nor a psychologist nor a social scientist. Formally, he de-scribes himself as a research and media analyst. Informally, he says he is "an ad man." His role is to interpret how the nine men and three women jurors react to witnesses and prosecution and defense attorneys. "I watch to see if they're alert, restless, bored, responsive," he said. "Are they for me or against me? Sometimes my suggestions are used. I will tell Fleming they paying attention when he said this, this and this, but not when he said that, that and

Mr. Mitchell was guilty.

"Much of life is selling," Mr. Herbst said. "As a matter of fact, it's all selling. We like to sell to our peers. The same applies to a lawyer. He might prefer a jury that is high income, well educated, a group of professionals, but such a jury could be detrimental to his

A profile was then drawn up of people least likely to see Mr. Mitchell as guilty. "We set up a weighted point system from purely arbitrary. A college grad-uate was minus 6, a Catholic was plus 4, a Jew was minus 5, a clerical worker earning between $8,000 ani $10,000 yearly was plus 4." Mr. Herbst said.

He said that sometimes people

Herbst's task was to devise a method for Mr. Fleming to analyze a juror's actual feelings.

That device, he said, is televi-sion. What we tried to do was reveal what jurors think through their media habits," somewhat in the way that advertising agencies determine how to package political candidate for a particular audience. It was, he said, a whole "new packaging process." Mr. Herbst said the publicity surrounding the trial enabled the attorneys to explore the television viewing habits of prospective jurors. The jury questioning pro-cess was held in the judge's chambers and a transcript was ordered sealed

As an example of their thinking, Mr. Herbst said: "The ideal personality for our purposes is John Wayne. He's authoritative, strong, the preserver of property rights, a right-winger. A viewer would identify him with John Mitchell, In other words, John Mitchell's mask is translated to John Wayne,

Of the nine men and three women jurors empaneled, all are married except one man and the foreman of the jury, a woman who is engaged to be married. Mr. Sporkin was preceded to the stand by Bradford Cook, formerly chief counsel and later chairman of the SEC, who admitted in testimony Friday that he had lied under oath on three occasions to the grand jury that investigated this case and twice to congressional committees.

Mr. Cook, one of the government's chief witnesses, said he lied to protect Mr. Stans and also protect the reputation of the SEC.

Under cross-examination, Mr. Cook was accused by defense attorneys of having also lied in the White House to Gen, Alexander Haig jr., President Nixon's chief of staff, and to Leonard Gar-ment, the President's special counsel.

On Thursday, Mr. Cook testified under direct examination by the government that he had lied only twice to the grand jury before changing his mind and deciding to tell the truth. His was the first hard testimony to really tie Mr. Stans in with the crimes alleged in this case.

Friday was largely a day of withering cross-examination for Mr. Cook. The harshest attack came from Mr. Stans's lawyer. The Black Cultural Association is the organization that brought together these individuals of varied backgrounds: it appears to be common denominator. The BCA was formed by inmakes at Vacaville in 1968 and was formally recognized by prison officials in 1969, when "tutors" from the community were allowed to come into the institution's educational program. Capt. Stanley Peaster. an of-

However, Colston Westbrook, civilian coordinator of the BCA. said at its peak, "We had about 40 active participants including inmates and outside people." Mr. Westbrook, a heavy-set

Mr. Westbrook said that the group had some influence over the inmates because the inmates are concerned with getting the hell out; they're vulnerable to damn near anything, and this group was consistent. They took over two political science courses and always brought in this Maoist stuff, like they would want to talk about the black man in Red China. And they didn't even know about the prob-

When Extremes Meet

was no new experience for that unhappy land. But the fact that both extreme Irish nationalists and fanatical Unionists seem to have been involved did emphasize the rationality of the moderate approach that the governments of Northern Ireland, the Irish Republic and the United Kingdom have made toward solving the problem of Ulster-while at the same time the success of the arsonists and murderers seemed to show that rationality alone is not enough.

If inflation is the greatest current economic global problem, cutting across oceans as well as national boundaries, minorities—ethnic. linguistic or religious-constitute the greatest challenge to the world's political wisdom. What is happening in Northern Ireland can be found in the Philippines, where Moslem fights Christlan; in Iraq, where Kurd fights Iraqi: among the Basques of Spain, the Palestimans of the Middle East, the Eritreans in Ethiopia, and the clashing Kakwas and Lugbaras in Uganda. In other forms, the dilemma of minority vs. majority appears among America's blacks, Indians and Chicanos. Canada's francophiles. Britain's Scottish Nationalists, the Turks of Cyprus, India's numerous language and ethnic groupings, Belgium's Walloons, the Jews in the Soviet Union.

All of these minorities have genuine grievances. The tyranny of the majority has been very real and often very brutal and exploitative. Then there is the subtler, but no less real, assue of how self-respect and a sense of identity can be strengthened by

A weekend of blood and flames in Ulater association with a prideful group, by a return to ancient cultural and historic roots. Today's mood, its Weltanschauung, is favorable both to the recognition of minority rights and to an understanding of wh atthose rights mean to the individuals concerned-although in practice this recognition and understanding in any given area may fall far short of the necessities of the case.

> But the real difficulty comes in working out a viable relationship between the majority and the minority. Great Britain and Ireland have tried hard to accomplish this in Ulster, with the aid of moderates on both sides of the divided population of Northern Ireland. It is clear enough that to impose a united Ireland on the Protestants of Ulster would mean continued strife by what would then be a minority, just as it has long been evident that to sustain the former intolerant majority rule within Northern Ireland would keep the Catholics in arms. But this stark truth does not prevent the extremists of both groups from fighting for their own impractical "final solutions."

It does not, unfortunately, take many extremists to make a civil war-or at least to create such terror that normal life becomes impossible. The only answer, then, when genuine accomodation has been truly sought, lies in the even-handed administration of justice in the suppression of terror-something which can all too easily glide into counterterror. But when the alternative is chaos, or the triumph of a bloody-minded minority, what else can a sane society do with its violent elements?

Moscow and the Mideast

the most important and the most demanding political testing ground for Soviet-American detente, the place which the overlap of greatpower rivalry and local tension has made the most dangerous in the world. But the Mideast is as well a region where both local sides. Arab and Israeli, look for a settlement primarily to the United States. American good faith is more or less generally accepted, despite American support of Israel. Soviet good faith is not widely accepted, perhaps in part because of subversive activities mounted by Moscow, especially in Egypt. The Kremlin's patronage is valued by its Arab friends far more in wartime than in peace. This has created a seemingly paradoxical situation. To improve relations and lessen tensions with the United States, the Russians must facilitate, or at least not block, the more the Mideast moves toward stability. the less influence in the region the Russians can expect to have. For them it is not an easy tradeoff.

Thus it is that Soviet policy in the Mideast remains essentially ambivalent, the more so after the Kissinger-Brezhnev talks in Moscow last week. The communique registered the formal Soviet support for a settlement. But the talks seem to have resulted in American agreement to consult the Kremlin more closely on the Mideast, and, at some point, to move negotiations from direct American sponsorship under Henry Kissinger, to joint Soviet-American sponsorship in the context of the Geneva peace conference. The Rusmans have been expressing increasing displeasure at being shut out of Mr. Kissinger's shuttle diplomacy, and at being ignored by their erstwhile military dependents, the Experians. Presumably, the United States, in return for letting Moscow nudge its way back into the Mideast diplomatic act, got

The Mideast is rightly regarded as at once some assurance that the Russians would not simply play the spoiler-by egging on the Arabs to take extreme positions, by feeding them excessive arms, by manipulating Arab governments in their own capitals, or whatever. If not, the United States got a bad deal. It will also be interesting, and indicative of overall Soviet intentions, to see if the Russians continue to tell the Arab oil states to maintain the embargo, to nationalize American oil properties, to keep oil prices high, to bar American investments, and to take their money out of Western banks.

At any rate, it appears that the Soviet Union is not now conducting a diplomatic breaking-and-entering operation to get into the talks which are about to begin in Washington to negotiate a disengagement of forces on the still hot cease-fire line between Syria diplomatic progress in the Middle East. But and Israel. As with Egypt, Moscow is not in a position to offer Syria the element crucial to successful disengagement: Israeli consent. As Israel's patron, the United States is In a position to offer Syria that element. A disengagement accord however, will be very difficult. Having attacked Israel twice in seven years and having lost territory both times, meanwhile having discained all efforts at a diplomatic solution. Syria still seems unaware of the change in its own attitude which will be required for a gradual accomedation. The Syrians are sald to feel rather abandoned by Egypt, which not only made its own disengagement accord promptly with Israel but went on to help persuade the Arab oll producers to lift their embargo on oil shipments to the United States. But perhaps the Syrians will now be ready to follow Egypt's reasonable lead. If they are, it will be that much easier for the United States to persuade Israel, which needs little persuading on this immediate issue, to do what is necessary for an early disengagement.

Ford's Speech on Nixon Aides

Not too long ago Spiro Agnew exposed for public decision the "effete anoba" of the precs and other liberal institutions to the wild applause of his audiences. At Chicago, his successor. Vice-President Ford, pulled no punches for the "arrogant adolescents" of the Committee for the Re-Election of the President. But everyone understood: Mr. Nixon had the aides that he deserved. [Mr. Ford's speech] was to be expected. The offensive to chase Mr. Nixon from the White House would not come from the Democrats.

What would they have to gain by moving into the front lines? "That would be the stupidest move of the century," a Democrat confided resently. "Let's leave the Watergate affair to sour and the President to try to work things out with his Republican friends. At the right moment we will count the bodies and pick up the pieces." This is so true that the Democratic party, instead of a trial over the burglary of its electoral headquarters, preferred to take substantial amounts of damages and interest.

In March 1970 the Kurds put down their arms. They are taking them up again today because, in their opinion. Iraq is financing a pan-Arab policy with Kurdish oil and giving no thought to a fair sharing out of revenues which could one day make an independent Kurdistan a viable concept. Iran is providing most of the arms and money for Gen. Barzani's Kurds. It remains to be seen how far the shah is prepared to go to solidify his opposition to the Iraqi Baath regime. It also remains to be seen what the two major powers, the Soviet Union and the United States, will do. It was perhaps not accidental that Soviet Defense Minister Marshal Grechko just passed through Baghdad, where Communists are associated with the government. The elements of a new Middle East conflict are present, but the Kurds seem more isolat-

The Light of History

By Anthony Lewis

BOSTON.—Once before in U.S. history, in 1866-67, the House Judiciary Committee investigated a president with a view to possible impeachment. The study of Andrew Johnson's conduct lasted more than 10 months. Its scope was summarized in a recent memorandum by President Nixon's Justice Department:

"The committee interviewed almost 100 witnesses, including cabinet officers and the President's personal secretaries. Department and presidential documents were produced, either voluntarily or in response to committee requests, and conversations with the President were related. It does not appear that any ciaim of executive privilege was

History does not usually provide conclusive evidence on legal issues. The clues conflict, and skilled lawyers extract from the past the meanings most helpful to their clients. As the present impeachment process unfolds. therefore, one should be cautious in claiming guidance from history. The record is obscure or mixed on a number of issues, for example the extent of defense counsel's participation.

Question of Evidence

But on one central question the history looks in one direction. That is the question of evidence -the right of the Judiciary Committee and the House to get the presidential records they need.

The Johnson inquiry is the one direct precedent, and it supports the widest congressional power to inquire. In addition to that actual pre-impeachment episode, at least seven presidents have made statements implying or plainly stating a broad view of what Congress may inspect when it formally undertakes the impeachment pro-

George Washington, refusing in 1796 to give the House documents that he thought lay within the Senate's treaty-ratifying powers, said: "It does not occur that the inspection of the papers asked for can be relative to any purpose under the cognizance of the House except that of an impeachment, which the resolution has not expressed." It is only a negative, but the implication may be there that impeachment gives the House overriding powers of

James Polk, made the most famous statement on the power of an impeachment inquiry, "In such a case," he said in 1846, "the safety of the republic would be the supreme law, and the power of the House in the pursuit of this object would penetrate into the most secret recesses... All the archives and papers of the executive departments, public or private, would be subject to the inspection and control of a committee of their body..."

James Buchanan, said in 1660 that the House acquired an "accusatory jurisdiction" when thought "any grave offense had been committed by the President" and looked to impeachment. "Except in this single case." he said, "the Constitution has invested the House with no power, no jurisdiction, no supremacy whatever over the President. In all other respects he is quite as independent of them as they are of him."

Ulysses Grant, spoke in 1876 of impeachment empowering the House to "require as a right... its demand upon the executive for information.

Grover Cleveland, in 1886 refused a Senate demand for material showing why he had removed a U.S. attorney-unless Congress acted "through the process of trial by impeachment." Impeachment, ne said, was a "grant of extraordinary powers. giving Congress "all the control and regulation of executive action supposed to be necessary for the safety of the people."

Theodore Roosevelt, in 1909 adamantly refused to give the Senate Judiciary Committee papers on why he had decided against bringing an anti-trust case. He told an assistant: "The only way the Senate or the committee can get those papers now is through my impeachment."

Those presidential comments over more than a century vary in persuasiveness. But so far, and significantly, none to the contrary has been produced. Presi-prising. Impeachment was written into the Constitution as the final check on executive wrong-doing, and it would be an illusion if it could be thwarted by some presidential privilege. James Wilson of Pennsylvania, one of the great figures at the Constitutional Convention of 1787, said it was good that presidents had no privilege: "The executive power is better to be trusted when it has no screen. Sir, we have a responsibility in the person of our president: he cannot act improperly and hide either his negligence or inattention: he cannot roll upon any other person the weight of his criminality."

pay the miners everything they had demanded and another, even bigger wage demand is in the pipeline right now: means that the coal industry—which means, of course, the nation—has to find another $100 million a year to pay the extra wage bill. That money can only be found, of course, from higher coal prices. So indeed it will be: Mr. Healey made that clear. But in order to blur the connection in the public's mind between the government's abandonment of a policy of wage restraint and the inevitable price increase not only in domestic coal but in all goods and services produced by coal-of coal is to be delayed until

November, by which time the gov-

That is not all. The biggest innovation of this government was their decision to subsidize some food prices, including bread and butter. The commitment appears to be an absolutely open-ended one, and indeed for political reasons it virtually has to be because if you hold back a rise in Drice of such things as bread and then, after a year or two, suddenly burst the dam, the resultant flood will wash away

No doubt anyone buying a house will be delighted to find that the interest payments on the money they borrow are lower than they feared; and although many realize that the money that did this trick has to come out of the public's pockets many will be sufficiently confused, and sufficiently grateful not to make the connection

Meanwhile, Britain's most crippling economic problem of allworse even than its domestic inflation and its halance-of-pay-ments—which is the appallingly low rate of industrial investment -has not just been ignored in the budget provisions: It has actually been made worse the budget literally makes it less worthwhile for industry to re-equip and modernize itself.

A Magic Wand

The Labor party won the election (or rather, since nobody "won" it, the Tories lost, because people managed to persuade themselves that the Labor party could pay for its program either by waving a magic wand or busoaking the rich." But there are no magic wands, and however thoroughly the rich are soaked, there still aren't enough of them to provide all the money needed

Yet what are the Conservatives to do? Can they campaign for what amounts to higher coal prices, higher bread prices, lower pensions? «I forgot pensions: The government is putting them up by an amount which means that another £1 billion a year has to be found. Can they must that young people trying to buy a house must pay the full economic, price for the money they need? They can, certainly: But the election in February showed pretty conclusively that people don't want to hear that everything bought has to be paid for They want to hear that there is a Santa Claus. And that is wha they are clearly going to hear from this government until the next election; after which the bills will come in. There isn't a Santa Claus, Virginia. MOSCOW.—Despite the initial shock in the West over the forced exile of Alexander Soizhenitsyn the Soviet leadership has been successful in ridding itself of the country's most celebrated dissenter without serious policy

After the expulsion six weeks ago, protests were raised by Western intellectuals and even some government figures. But the Solzhenitsvn affair has not become a point of contention in any important East-West negotiations. or in discussions on the issues of human rights or freer flow of ideas between East and West,

The banishment of the 55-yearold author has demoralized a number of his friends and other iconoclastic Soviet intellectuals. They say privately that they now fear official reprisals.

The authorities let his wife depart last week with her family and her husband's archives without problems or harassment. They evidently had calculated that this would quickly close the case and hasten the decline of Russia's most powerful and controversial writer of mid-century into oblivion in the West.

The one risk for Moscow is that it will (see both propaganda and policy repercussions later when Solzhenitsyn's book "The Gulag Archipelago, 1918-1956" comes out in large editions in the West.

By sentencing its author to permanent exile, the Kremlin gave the book far wider publicity and attention than it would otherwise have gotten and probably insured that this devastating account of the Soviet prison system-before, during and after Stalin-will be one of the most widely read books in a decade.

Some Western diplomats suggest that this could have repercussions, reinforcing the skeptleism of some Western political factions toward detente with Moscow, and reviving suspicions about Stalinism, much as did the invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968.

Only a few copies of the small Paris edition of "Gulag" are reportedly circulating here in Moscow, but interest in the work is intense among intellectuals and young people. Black market prices run from 30 to 80 rubles (about $39 to $104). Waiting lists to read the circulating 606-page copies are said to be long.

He further contended that the threat from foreign spies is now greater than in the 1940s and 1950s.

Reaction was mixed. Paul Bixby a freshman remarked. "I think he has a lot of guts to sit in the hot seat." but quickly added that he was unimpressed

A number of scholars specializing in law enforcement who met with Mr. Kelley described him in terms such as "sincere" and "honest." Sen. Jackson, chairman of the Senate Interior Committee, did not give any specific figures, but said the extremely high profits were because the Nixon administration had failed to control all oil prices as required by the

"As a result of this policy, firstquarter 1974 profits will rise to obscene levels," he said, "When the profits statements of major oil companies are made public in where the 60 and 70 cents a gallon for gasoline have been going."

Jury Told Boyle Paid for Killings

ъ. MEDIA, Pa., April 1 (UPI).— Special Prosecutor Richard Sprague charged today that former United Mine Workers president W.A. (Tony) Boyle "called for and paid for" the slaying of union reform candidate Joseph (Jock) Yablonski,

In his opening remarks at the murder trial of Boyle, 72, Mr. Sprague told the jury of ninc men and three women that Boyle gave the orders for that assas-

Mr. Yablonski was slain along with his wife and daughter in Clarksville, Pa., on Dec. 31, 1969, Mr. Sprague argued that, when Mr. Yablonski announced on May 29. 1969, that he would oppose Boyle for the union presidency, he "signed his own warrant for death."

In his opening statement, defense attorney Charles Moses said the allegations made in the case "are simply not true." He said the "ultimate issue" was whether "Boyle was responsible for these deaths. The answer is no."

Uncle Sam's Canal-Zone Law Stirs Panamanian Tempers

By Dan Morgan

BALBOA, Panama Canal Zone. April 1 :WP:-In the little Magistrate's Court which sits between the police station and the Elks Locge atop a hill here, almost everything was American.

A constable called the court to order in English and Spanish. Families and friends sat down and an American police officer read the charges in the first case -the Government of the Canal Zone versus Vilma Cordero.

Mrs. Cordero stood, slouching slightly and nodding when addressed by Judge John Baker, a patient, slow-talking graduate of West Point and Yale Law School. Finally, he said to the constable. "I don't (hink she understands. Please read that in Spanish."

A few minutes later the woman was escorted back to jail, to await a hearing later in the day on a charge of re-entering a U.S. Air Force base after being ordered to stay out.

Few places in Panania better illustrate the basic issue that gives rise to the tensions in and around the Canal Zone than the Balboa Magistrate's Court.

Nationalism on Rise Thousands of Panamanians, and many Americans, have passed through the lower court. Now the increasingly nationalistic population of Panama wants to recapture sovereignty over the Canal Zone, which, among other things, would end trials of Panaman:ans

Although the United States has offered to make concessions to Panama, probably by allowing the republic more canal revenues and turning over some of the zone for urban expansion, many Panamanians say that U.S. law prevailing over the 530-square-mile zone angers them most. Some effort has been made to diminish the harsh side of U.S. law in the zone. Forty of its 300 policemen are Panamanians, and so are many court personnel.

Yet none of that satisfies the Panamanians, who hate the fact that American law governs a large area of their country. "It's not right." a local newspaper editor said recently, as he drove his car on Fourth of July Street, the zone's boundary in Panama City.

"One minute I am in Panama, The next I can be picked up by a foreign policeman, tried in a foreign court and sent to a foreign jail—in my own country,"

Similar emotions were expressed recently by a truck driver, who lives in an $18-a-month cottage ın San Miguelito, a suburb of Panama City. "There must be one law," he said. "No more American police, no more American courts, no more American judges." Otherwise, he predicted, there will be

BRUSSELS-The Business Of Making Learning Fun

By Jan Sjöby

BRUSSELS (IHT) .- The ground floor of the Calozet Institute at 40 Rue des Chartreux in Brussels looks like a hobby shop, and perhaps it is Learning, director Jean de Groef believes, should be on a hobby basis It ought to be challenging, meaningful fun.

Educators tend to agree. The Calozet showroom is visited by teachers from all over the world, looking for new ideas and new approaches to the impossible task of teaching.

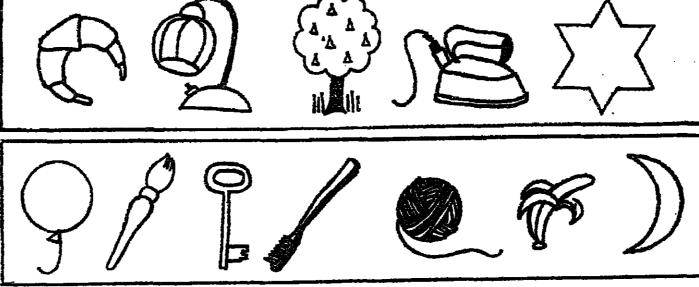

"A teacher can't teach anyone anything," asserts Mr. de Groef. "He or she can merely inspire and guide a learning process. We, in close cooperation with a number of similar organizations around the world, are trying to help the teachers."

The help is primarily directed toward the teachers on preschool and primary-school levels because "that's where the trouble

"The human brain is fully developed at an age of 6 or 7." said Mr. de Groef, "waiting to be filled with relevant information, to be trained to operate at full capacity. We can't afford to waste that capacity, but we do, through inadequate teaching methods. The kids aren't inspired enough to face primary school. In primary school, they aren't motivated enough to cope with secondary. In secondary school, they don't have a chance to pick up what they'll need at the university level. The problem begins at the bottom of the scale, at pre-school level.

"By 1980, statisticians report. this country alone will need 80,000 brains in intellectual and managerial positions. Will we have them, with the traditional system of education?"

The Calozet Institute, 100 years old this year, was founded by a Brussels school inspector, Théophile Calozet, who was an apostle of Friedrich Fröbel (1782-1852). the German romantic heretic who believed that learning should be fun-those three Rs should be a gabe (gift), not forced labor.

jigsaw puzzles.

"Chubby little fingers," said Mr. de Groef, "employed in a meaningful manner, transmit messages to developing brains."

Ears are as important as hands. Mr. de Groef believes: Educational discs range from Homer to La Fontaine to Grimm to Andersen, from Beethoven to Prokofiev.

Mr. Calozet's institute was originally organized as a teachers' college, crusading to bring Dr. Probel's ideas to schoolteachers. The ideas were most likely right, but the times were not.

"We don't operate a teachers' college anymore," said Mr. de Groef, who took over as director after World War II. "We concentrate on developing teaching alds, covering international developments in the new education systems, informing teachers and school boards about what is going on in the field. We have been reasonably successful, even though we are storming the formidable brick walls of the traditional educational establishment." A teacher, Mr. de Groef be-clay, coloring books, metal-work-ing equipment and educational entertainer, capable of making jugzaw puzzles. Heves, "should be an informed entertainer, capable of making the subject at hand interesting, even exciting."

No Elbowroom

"We don't have too many teachers like that," he added. "Many teachers are simply in-competent, all of them are underpaid. There is no elbowroom for Though Mr. de Groef and his chief associates (daughter Camille and son Michel) Work on an international scale, he believes that the problem of inadequate education is somewhat aggravated in Beigium "on account of our unique political, linguistic and religious situation." Mr. de Groef tends to blame the politicians and Belgian politics, which have been somewhat chaotic since 1815 (excunt the French) and 1830 (exeunt the Dutch).

"We have state schools, communal schools and 'free' parochial schools," continued Mr. de Groef, "all subsidized by the government and supervised by the two (French-language and Dutchlanguage) Ministries of Educa-tion. We used to have one set of incompetents; now, in the seventies, we have two . . Mr. de Groef pointed out that 25 percent of the national budget goes to education and planning rocesses are impressive.

"The one thing left out of the planning," said Mr. de Groef, "Is the child, assumedly the recep-tacle of all that knowledge." Mr. de Groef terms himself a lawyer-turned-businessman.

"He isn't a businessman," said Camille, "he's an idealist like the rest of us. We are concerned about the brainpower potential of the next generation." The 188-page Calozet catalogue of educational aids ranges from finger paints and coloring sheets

—"find all the doggles and color them brown"-to reasonably sophisticated equipment for enam-eling, to very sophisticated (very simple, Mr. de Groef maintains) texts and sets of multicolored wooden or plastic rods for learning new math.

"We are entering the age of the computer," said Mr. de Groef, "The computer thinks in a new, more logical manner. The next generation will have to keep up with the computer."

MUSIC IN LONDON

The Link Between Rossini And Singer Juliette Gréco

By Henry Pleasants

TONDON, April 1 (IHT).—Juliette Greco always reminds me of Rossini. Not of anything he wrote, of course. Greco does not work in that repertoire, or anything like it. But of something Rossin: is supposed to have said.

When asked what one needs to be a singer, so the story goes, he replied: "You need three things—voice, voice and voice!" It is usually assumed that he meant just that, and too many singers over the decades have conducted themselves and their singing accordingly. I am reasonably confident that a tape recording of that statement would prove by the tone of Rossini's voice that he was making a wry joke, expressing exasperation with his singers' tendency to think of nothing else.

He would probably have loved Greco, a remarkable singer who, at the Royal Festival Hall on Saturday night, covered an extraordinary range of character and mood with practically no voice at all, at least in the con-ventional sense of an instrument with which to spin out and sustain a melodic line. Her voice is too limited in size and range for that. But it is wonderfully in color and shade, an ideal instrument for mining the lyrical ore of language.

Most of the songs she sang, including many new ones by Maurice Fanon with music by Gérard Jouannest, her musical director, are about love affairs of one kind or another, and at one stage or another. But the one which persisted through every song she sang was her own love affair with the French language.

It's not just the words as such. It is the music implicit in the words, the music which makes a word like l'hiver, as she savors it and sings it, evoke a landscape encased in ice and snow, and a word like printemps suddenly become a hymn to flowering trees shrubs, greening hillsides and brooks wending their way through verdant meadows.

She doesn't do it all with just the voice, of course. She is as dependent on gesture, facial ex-

But at the center of everything is French. yielding, as all languages will to those sensitive to the lyrical properties of the rhythms, inflections, contours and cadences of speech, a music richer and more eloquent that was ever achieved by voice alone. # Chicken—From Plato and Diogenes to Alice B. Toklas

'The Council of Auchen ruled in 817 that it was a dish too sumptuous for fastdays and forbade monks to eat it except during four days at Easter and four more at Christmas.'

By Waverley Root First of two articles

W/HEN Plate proposed to the academy that man be defined as "a two-legged animal without feathers." Diogenes plucked a cock, or so his namesake Diogenes Laertius tells us, and held it up for the inspection of the Greek sages. "This." he said, "according to Plato's definition, is a man." The wording was therefore altered to: "Man: a two-legged animal without feathers and with broad flat nails."

Man's association with the chicken began about 2000 EC in India, where the wild red jungle fowl was first domesticated and. considered as a sacred bird, was consulted by augurs in search of omens. Priests of many times and climes have customarily made alimentary use of the remains of sacrificial animals after the gods had received their offerings of the less edible parts, so it is sofe to assume that the chicken was nct long in finding its way to the table. Spreading northward and eestward, it made its way through China and on to the Pacific islands. The chronicler of the Magellan expedition reported that the natives of the Philippine island of Palawan possessed "large cocks," but didn't eat them: they were ruised for cockfighting.

Central Europe

In the other direction, westward, where most Asiatic foods entered Europe via the Mediterranean crea, the chicken is believed, exceptionally, to have reached Central Europe first, about 1500 BC. and not to have appeared in the Near East until of least a century later. Even 1400 BC seems a little early. Egypt at this date and for several centuries thereafter possussed ducks and geese, but no chickens. The Hebrews of Old Testament times apparently had none either: at least there is no reference to chickens in the Old Testament, not even in Deuteronomy and Leviticus, which give lengthy lists of the birds which it was permitted to eat and those which it was forbidden to eat, where the chicken would certainly have been cited if it then existed. The chicken first appears in but diffidently. The Greek colonists who founded Sybaris on the foot of Italy in 720 BC passed a law barring roosters from the city so that their crowing would not wake them up too early; but though Sybaris was a food-conscious city, it seems to have left no other references to the chicken. The Greeks of this period. and the early Romans, did not as a rule eat chicken. They kept the birds only for their eggs. It may be presumed that they were scrawny beasts, left to forage for themselves, which tempted one's appetite. Then Greeks on the island of Cos developed the art of fattening chickens for the table: it spread to Rome, and suddenly all the citizens of the capital seemed to be raising chickens at home for their own consumption. The streets became so infested with them that ordinances had to be passed barring them from the city.

By the Middle Ages, chicken enjoyed great favor, and was so often considered a luxury shat from time to time sumptuary legislation was enacted to restrain its consumption. The Council of cept during four days at Easter and four more at Christmas. The chicken had its fastday status restored temporarily in the 13th century when St. Thomas Aquinas held that it was of aquatic origin and was thus edible on the same terms as fish; but the church later overrul

In 1261 St. Louis took the trouble to issue a decree concerning hen houses; his own poultry yard in the Rue St. Antoine was one of the most famous in France. Medieval trenchermen, accustomed to the strong taste of inrefrigerated game, thought domesticated chicken too bland, so it was the habit to hang it until it too had acquired a gamey flavor. If unexpected guests caught a host with no decomposing chickens on hand, they were thoroughly beaten in the kitchen so that the battered flesh looked as if it had begun to degenerate properly even if it didn't taste that way. Chicken must have been plentiful in 14th-century Austria, or it would not have occurred to Minnesinger Heinrich von Neu-stadt to scold Viennese women for "drinking a carale of wine and eating half a fried chicken before going to mass, so they will feel better in head and stomsch" -Viennese Backhuhn already! In England-or off England, if you prefer-the Dame of Sark collected from the 40 farms into which her island flef was originally divided a tax paid in kind, which which meant "hen" in French, the language of the island at that time. In Switzerland, the court of the city of Basic condemned a rooster to be burned alive for laying an egg.

Everybody knows of King Henri IV's famous promise: "Si Dieu me donne encore de la vie, je feray qu'il n'y aura point de laboureur, en mon Royaume, qui n'ait moyen d'avoir une poule dans son pot (If God still gives me life, I will so act that there will be no tiller of land in my kingdom who will not have the means to put a chicken in his pot). It was a calculated declaration, part of the king's program to stem a flight from the countryside by peasants discouraged by the constant warfare that had ravaged their lands. (In 1932 "a chicken in every pot" was to become the electoral slogan of the U.S. Republican party; it lost.) Louis XVI was a great eater of roast chicken, and called for it even when he was lodged in the Conciergerie waiting for his rendezvous with the guillotine. Napoleon has been described as a chicken fancier, but actually he once insulted the bird. The Gallic cock, still today a symbol of France, which had appeared on some of the improvised benners of the French Revolution, was urged upon him to surmount his fisgpoles. "I don't want a bird that is eaten by foxes," Napoleon snapped, and placed the eagle on his standards.

The battery-raised chicken has now extracted all taste from this animal but before that disastrous event occurred, chicken was a symbol for hixurious eating. In 1745, Lady Wortley Montagu coupled it with another luxury symbol in her poem "The Lover," when she wrote, "And we meet with champagne and a chicken at last." On the other side of the world in the same century the Chinese poet Yuan Mei listed chicken with "the four heroes of the table." "More wondrous, wondrous still, the cock and hen." wrote William Blake. And Charles Edward Carryl was certainly not denigrating this fowl when, in "The Plaint of the Camel," he permitted his ill-fed protegonist to moan:

And as for the poodles, they tell me the noodles Have chicken and cream for Beuys is something of a myth in the German art world. For a number of years (before he started devoting himself exclusively to political activities), he was noted for his enigmatic "actions" which involved a liberal use of iard and slabs of gray felt, among other things. The morbidity of his work is somebow accentuated by the suggestion that it is not unconnected with a breakdown he had prior to the beginning of that pariod. His apologists, while re-ferring to the "sordid and anguished climate" surrounding his actions, see them as a cathartic exercise referring to the war years and the camps Others launch themselves into exegetic exercises of deliriously random arbitrariness, next to which the Fathers of the Church or the cabalists appear narrowly down the earth. The interest of the show then resides in the conjunction of a phenomenon that is printedly meaningless with a critical appraisal that attempts to inject order into the mess (driven by an impulse not so far remote from that which constrains a bird to try to hatch a portelain egg), and subsequently with public response which can real any number of things into the work with the (silent) blessing of the artist. Whatever Beuys ercomplishes it certainly does rot conform with the manifesto by which he claims to "promote liting art, anti-art, non-art renity to be grasped by all people, not only critics, dilettantes and pro-

The index has dropped more than 20 percent from its level on Feb. 23, election day, when it was at 337.8 and it has dropped another 34.2 points since Chancellor of the Exchenger Denis Healey announced the government budget

Share prices are only 12 points from a 16-year low, and, taking inflation into account, it is estimated that share values are now lower than in the mid-1920s. Some believe the market has now established a base, but there are other predictions that share prices borlom out" later this gran at about 220, as measured by the Financial Times index.

Dollar Improves As Interest Rates Move in Its Favor

LONDON, April 1 (AP-DJ).-The dollar rose against European currencies today as interest rates for short-term deutsche mark deposits declined and Eurodollar interest rates rose.

The spot dollar rose to 2 5480 DM from 2.5305 Friday. Onemonth DM deposit rates declined one percentage point in Frankfurt from Friday to 9.75 percent while the three and six-month maturities eased about 0.38, to 10 13 percent

In contrast, one-month Eurodollar rates rose a quarter point, to 10.5 percent, while the three and six-month rates gained about 0.13 to 10.13 percent.

Thus, interest rate differentials between the mark and dollar were more or less evened out for the first time this year Previously. the differentials in favor of the mark had been significant. A dealer said the shift in interest rates, plus the Bundesbank's support for the dollar on Friday. probably helped tip foreign exchange rates in favor of the dollar today. He said that otherwise there was little news to affect the foreign exchange market. The dollar also gained sharply against the Swiss franc, rising to 3.0338 from 3.0010 Friday. However, sterling rose against the dollar to $2,3963 from $2,3940 as Eurosterling interest rates held steady at 20 percent offered for one month and 195 percent for three months.

Inflation Outlook in U.S. Divides Economists Increase in Prime Rate

By Soma S. Golden NEW YORK, April 1 (NYT).-Militon Friedman, the celebrated conservative economist at the University of Chicago, predictthat three or four years from now Inflation in the United States will be soaring at a steady 10 to 12

Walter Heller, charman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers (CEA) in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. thinks that the rate will be down to 4 or 5 percent by then-but admits that he is "queasy" about his optimism. Interviews with a score of leading economists in recent weeks turned up no one who expected that the pace of consumer price increases would drop back to the 2.8 percent average of the 1960s Inflation has come home to the United States. After years of slowly rising prices and seeming immunity from the virulent inflation elsewhere, the giant and roubled U.S. economy stands poised in the middle of a serious and wormsome inflationary spiral. Economists are stunned by it.

'Indexing' Urged

Prof. Friedman in recent weeks has sounded like a far-out radical, calling for a comprehensive national "Indexing" system modeled on an experiment that he says has succeeded in Brazil. He would ettach a variety of escalator clauses to all wages and pensions and to such things as bond interest rates, so that people would indicates that he expects the problem to subside An important element in this viewpoint is that about half of the 10 percent rise in consumer prices during the last year was caused by a combination of anomalles. These include the devaluation of the dollar, the Soviet wheat deal, the escalation of the price of oil and worldwide boom conditions that sent food and other commodity prices souring,

When these big hubbles are absorbed, they say, the country could settle back to 4 or 5 percent inflation-in the view of Mr.

As the number one performer in the energy industry, Tesoro Petroleum Corporation quite understandably has attracted the attention of the investment community. The men responsible for billions of investment dollars have been asking forthright questions of Tesoro's Chairman, Dr. Robert V. West, Jr. Here are their questions—and his answers.

Q. During the past seven years, the compound growth rate of Tesoro's per share earning; has exceeded 50% per year. Also in the first quarrent of the current year. Tesoro's per share earning; were 500% of those for the same quarter last year. Do you think Tesoro can such in the enates of earnings growth?

A. Obviously it would be impossible to maintain a 300% earnings growth rate for any sustained period of time. A 30% compound growth rate is also difficult to maintain over a long period. However, through judicious investment we expect to maintain the attractive growth rate in per share earnings that our company has experienced in recent years.

Q. There has been when of control erry, regarding accounting practices in the petroleum industry. How does Teroro handle livers counting, particularly for petroleum exploration and production?

A. Tesoro uses the principle of full-cost accounting whereby all exploration and development costs are capitalized, and subsequently amortized on a unit-of-production basis as the perfoleum developed from these expenditures is produced.

The full-cost pools established under this principle are treated separately for different international and geo-political areas. Our company is a proponent of full-cost accounting, and believes strongly that drilling dry holes is as much a part of the development expense.

of oil and gas reserves as is the drilling of production wells. We feel that all of these expenses represent the "full cost" of being in the exploration and production business.

Q. In recent years Tesoro has continually made capital expenditures substantially in excess of its earnings. Do you intend to continue this policy?

A. It's true that our capital budget has exceeded our not earnings over the past several years. We are pursuing this policy in 1974 as well. The petroleum business provides a well-managed company many opportunities for investment, partially with borrowed capital, in anticipation of tomorrow's energy needs and price levels. We are maling these investments now because we believe in the fature of the energy industry in the United States.

Q. In an industry that is going to require capital investments of Stote to Swell hillion by 1985, and therefore in which combanies not that expect financial capability, what future do you see for a medium-size companishe Tesoro?

A. There are more oppose anities for a well-managed company of Tesoro's size than for the giant majors. Tesoro is more flexible than a major company and can respond to opportunities more quickly because it is not bound by tradition as the majors are. Neither is Tesoro so multi-national in character that the adoption of a new policy in one area upsets existing possiles in other areas. Despite our size, with our banking connections, capital structure and security listings on the New York and London stock exchanges, we are able to attract the capital funds' needed for many growth opportunities.

Q. How do you feel about the political climate of Trinidad and Tobago!

A. We are extremely confident about the stability of the Government of Trinidad and Tobago, with whom we are co-owners of the stock of a Trinidad corporation —Trinidad-Tesoro Petroleum Company Limited. We are also most optimistic about our future in this area for a number of reasons. These include the abundance of talent and natural resources, the improved world price structure for petroleum energy and the unquestionable integrity of the Government, with whom our relations continue to be excellent.

Q. Recently Pertamina, the state-owned oil company of Indonesia, announced that it was renegotiating production-sharing contracts with oil companies in Indonesia. What do you think of this action?

A. Prices for low-sulphur Indonesian crude oil have risen sharply on world markets. Pertamina feels that it is entitled to a greater percentage of these higher prices—an attitude similar to the one held by those in the U.S. who favor an "excess profits tax" on petroleum companies. The Indonesian Government is under pressure at home to generate more revenue for social and economic programs, and obviously felt that the most convenient way to produce the money it needed was through greater participation in the sharply increased profits from Indonesian oil production. This action will certainly deprive companies operating in Indonesia of some income which they probably would have reinvested in the country.

Q. With the nationwide shortage of gasoline, how will Tesoro continue to expand its gasoline sales? A. In recent years, Tesoro's retail sales of gasoline have expanded at an annual rate of about 25 percent. Much of this growth is due to an increase in the number of stations of Digas Company, a wholly-owned Tesoro subsidiary which markets gasoline through highvolume stations. With nationwide limitations on gasoline supply-the expansion rate of the Digas chain will obviously be curtailed. However, with the firming of gasoline prices, profitability of marketing operations has improved and decreases in expansion rates should be more than offset by increases in profit margins. Q. With the approval of the Alveska Pipeline, business activities in Alaska are expected to increase. How active is Tesoro in Alaska? :

A. Tesoro owns the largest crude oil refinery in Alaska. In addition, we market gasoline through 75 owned or controlled service stations. We are also planning to open a geological office in Anchorage in order to become active in oil and gas exploration. In short, our company already is very active in Alaska, and plans to increase its involvement there substantially.

Q. You have talked and written about the need for our country to become self-sufficient in energy. How do you see us achieving this, and how will Tesoro be involved aside from its present activities?

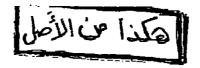

A. America has numerous unexplored areas that are prospective for oil and gas production, particularly areas offshore from the east and west coasts, deeper offshore fields in the Gulf of Mexico and several parts of Alaska. Tesoro plans to be active in petroleum exploration in these areas. America also has vast reserves of coal and of oil shale. Recently we formed a new division, Tesoro Coal Company, to concentrate on the acquisition and development of coal properties. We believe that coal must satisfy a great portion of America's energy needs in coming decades, and we intend to become very much involved in the coal business. Later, as environmental problems are solved and as Government leases are granted, our company hopes to be active in the production of shale oil. American self-sufficiency in energy will be difficult, but not impossible, to achieve. Coal and shale oil will play large roles in the self-sufficiency process, and we expect to be important in both.

Fewer responses but...

Executive recruitment advertisements in the International Herald Tribune will not bring you 100-150 curriculum vitae, as in a national daily newspaper... they bring in normally between 15 and 30 responses.

Over the past two years, however, they provided an average of 5 to 6 candidates who were qualified to hold the job... the critical statistic!

The International Herald Tribune asked personnel directors and management consultants to evaluate each of their recruitment advertisements in terms of responses, number of qualified candidates and advertising investment. We have assembled this information, job by job, category by category, in our 'Cost-Per-Candidate Report'.

The Cost-Per-Caudidate Report will be mailed to any interested recruitment executive (please mention title, company's name). free of charge, by writing to:

THE GRAND ACQUISITORS

By John L Hess. Houghton Mifflin. 178 pp. $5.95.

Reviewed by Karl Meyer

THIS short, readable and saucy book is a souvenir of a journalistic happening that occurred at The New York Times from early 1972 to mid-1973. During that period. The Times subjected the Metropolitan Museum of Art to the kind of bard-edged, hardfact reporting the paper more normally reserves for police cor-ruption or White House scandals. Some found it very upsetting.

John Hess, a veteran Times reporter, was one of the muckrak-ers, and his stories were the most provoking of all to the rulers of the Met, in particular director Thomas Hoving. His name for a while was about the vilest fourletter word that could be uttered in the museum.

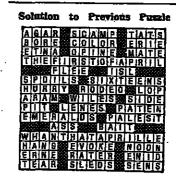

An episode suggests why In January, 1973, Hess learned that one of the museum's most popular paintings—the "Odalisque" by Ingres—had unaccountably van-ished. There were rumors it was being sold. Being an old-fashion-ed reporter, Hess simply asked Hoving where the missing painting was.

"It is not in the museum," the director said. Where was it then? "It's none of your business." When Hess insisted that the public had some right to know and that his paper wanted simply to publish the facts, Hoving replied: "Frankly, I don't believe you. I think-your balance is a little off." But in the end Hoving did confirm that the painting had left the museum some time before, adding, reluctantly, that its very authenticity was in doubt.

If Hess had not asked the ques-tion, the lovely nude in soft gray could well have vanished without warning into a foreign collection. Indeed Hess later learned—too late for inclusion in this book—that a Japanese collector was about to buy the painting just as Hoving's remarks, casting doubt on the work's pedigree, were quoted in The Times. The sale fell through The "Odalisque" once again hangs in the Met, over the label "Ingres and Workshop."

But the story gets curiouser and curiouser. One of the world's leading authorities on Ingres, the French dealer Daniel Wildenstein, who had examined the painting for a year in his Paris gallery, said he had "no doubt whatsoever" that the nude was by the master. And Wildenstein was the very expert picked by the Met to study the Ingres!

As Hess points out, laymen are too easily cowed by museum curators and art historians—even the Met's trustees evidence an awed inferiority complex. One of them, Frances Plimpton, the eminent New York attorney, once remarked: "In a way, it makes no sense for museums to be run by expert on art. But the museum is pretty darned good, and we're trying to do the best job we can."

Are the Met's curators really that good? Hess supplies evidence embarrassingly to the contrary. embarrassingly to the tangent.
His book is essentially 2 critical history of the Hoving era begin-ning in 1967, during which the greatest American art museum has plunged deeply into the red while becoming the butt of ridi-cule and controversy.

Should the museum have paid $5.5 million for a Velasquez with out even consulting its own trustees? (There are five known versions of the artist's "Juan de Pareja," one of them already in a New York museum; moreover, a Detroit museum paid fee a Detroit museum paid far less -$1.1 million-for a comparably rare Caravaggio.

Is it a triumph of masso-graphy first to brand a famous Greek bronze as a fake, and then a few years later, with equal fanfare, to announce that the Greek horse is a genuine antiquity? By what right can the Metropolitan violate the spirit of a bequest by selling secretly, and in wholesale lots, the paintings left it by Ade-laide de Groot? (Miss De Groot had urged in her will that any paintings the Met did not went should be given to other American museums.)

These are some of the matters examined in considerable detail by Hess. Regrettably, however, if for understandable reasons, the author is more circumspect in discussing his own paper's role in the controversy.

Over the years, there has been a kind of genteel complicity between the Met and The Times, for many reasons, some of them good. The Metropolitan is a great museum, a proud civic landmark, so reputable that successive Times publishers have been members of its board of trustees. But the advent of Thomas Hoving has put a marked strain on this past relationship.

When the paper's chief art critic, John Canaday, learned of the Met's secret sales, he wrote a story in early 1972 saying that major works were being "deac-cessioned" to dealers. He was all but called a liar by Hoving though Canady was proved right on every essential point. Then the museum acquired, later in 1972, a Greek vase for a million dollars, an antiquity which some suspect is a "hot pot," smuggled from Italy.

with courage, The Times assigned its chief crime reporte, Nicholas Gage, to trace the mysterious origins of the vase. Hess and others (including David Shirey) contributed a series of articles which for the first time threw light on how the museum was run and how the art and antiquities market operates. But siter a year, the effort ended. During the Hoving era, as Hess reswap about a quarter of a billion dollars' worth of art without a word to the public on the terms of the dealings, or even the fact they had occurred.

Hess then adds, unassailably: "Clearly, this situation cannot endure. If they are to keep their tax exemptions and subsidies, our museums will have to conduct their affairs in the broad day-light of public scrutiny." This book is a ploneering attempt to cast a crack of light on a now closed and secretive world.

A strong four-three fit may-offer better prospects at the sixlevel than a weak four-four fit, but this is often hard to judge in the auction. North-South overcame this hurdle on the diagramed deal and landed a dashing slam contract that could have been defeated.

When North opened the bidding and then raised the onespade response, South did not look any further for a trump suit. This was just as well, for exploration might have disclosed the four-four club fit and landed the partnership in a hopeless six

290 Horses Are Nominated

Nobody's Scared of Kentucky Derby

NEW YORK, April 1 (NYT). There are 290 nominees for the 7 5 100th Kentucky Derby, and as far as their owners are concerned basis of form displayed by the 3-year-olds up to now, any one of the 290 is capable of beating the and especially on Saturday May 4. To be sure, the cost of starting in the Derby has been raised from 54,100 to $7,600 rut with 13 starters, which was the size of Secretariat's field last year, victory would be worth $199,000. The price, in short, is right.

Hoping to keep the running strip less congested than the grandstand aisles, the Kentucky State Racing Commission has adopted a new rule that "the maximum number of starters in any race shall be limited to the number of starting positions afforded by the Association starting gate Trust and extensions thereof."

The starting gate at Churchill Downs has 14 stalls and the one. at Keeneland, which could be shipped over to Louisville, has 12. That means no more than 26 horses could go to the post, and yet, the century-old conditions for the Derby open the race to every registered 3-year-old filoroughbred whose owner pays the nominating entry and starting fees on time. There is no first-come first-served provision, and it is too late to establish special qualifying stan-

WFL Toronto Expects NFL Signings to Bring Acceptance in Canada

Officials of the Toronto Northmen in the World Football League made it clear yesterday that they believe the signing of three National Football League stars will help enormously to wipe out political opposition to operations of the fledgling league in Canada,

Leo Cahill, general manager of the Northmen, told a news conference he was sure Canadian lans would be delighted by "this great signing" of three Miami Dolphins, Larry Cronka, Jim Kiick and Paul Warfield, "And I hope." Cabiil added, "that the lans will make their wishes known to their governments."

Northmen officials also were clearly tubilant at confounding the many skeptics who had suggested that inviting the three stars to Canada for contract negotiations was little more than million package deal, the three Dolphins agreed to join the Northmen for the 1975 season. They will evidently play out their options with the Super Bowl champs.

The chief spokesman for the political enemies of the WFL is cabinet member. Health and Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde. In a speech about six weeks ago in Western Canada, Lalonde unexpectedly announced that the federal government would not allow the WFL to operate the Northmen or any other team in this country.

Lalonde claimed it always had been federal policy to keep U.S. teams out of Canada. His principal concern is understood to be that competition from American football would weaken the nine-team Canadian football

The Canadian and American cames are played by slightly different rules but they compete for substantially the same sports fans. Lalonde's position is by no means supported unanimously. It has been ridiculed in most letters on the subject to Canadian nexspapers and has been strongly opposed by other politicians at the federal, provincial and municipal levels. The Metro chairman, Paul God-

TORONTO. April 1 (NYT) -- the two top municipal officials in Toronto, have publicly rejected Lalonde's stand, refused his request to deny the Northmen access to the municipally owned football stadium and said they welcome the new franchise.

Nevertheless, in his most recent word on the subject, Lalonde told the House of Commons last Thursday that federal legislation to exclude the Northmen was being drafted and might be introduced before the middle of Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau has stayed out of the controversy so far and disclosed no leaning one way or the other.

Critics of Lalonde note that a short-lived Toronto team called the Rifles played in an American minor football league in the late 1950s and that all the 20 U.S. teams in the National Hockey League and World Hockey Association are staffed mainly by Canadian players. Moreover, the Montreal Expos play paseball in the National League. Critics also suggest that Lalonde's stand is politically moti-vated because concern about the future of the CFL is strongest in Western Canada, where the ruling Liberal party is weakest and needs the most votes.

In any event, even if Lalonde should succeed, the signing of the three Dolphins was hailed in the Toronto sports world as a triumph that will make the Northmen's franchise much more valuable if it has to be sold to an American

Teamed with Colin Dibler, a fellow Australian, Laver got involved in a protracted struggle with the Czech team of Jan Kodes and Vladimir Zednik, before yielding, 6-3, 6-7, 6-7, with each of the last two sets reaching the sudden-death point

That meant Laver had played 69 games, including three tiebreakers, on the Ironwood Country Club center court in 90-degree heat yesterday.

More important than the $10,-000 first prize to Laver were the 75 points he gained towards qualification for the eight-man WCT event in Dallas in May-the one that carries a $50,000 first prize. To get there, a player has to finish first or second in the point standings in his group there are three groups; or have one of the next two highest totals. Laver now has 225 points,

What's wrong with that?" "Nixon seems to indicate that there's something wrong with lishing. "Come on, Foster, you're over-sensitive."

"I am not," he said angrily. "Fishing thanks to the admin-istration, now has a dirty con-notation to it. Just yesterday I told some friends at the office I was going on a fishing expedition this weekend and they said they were going to report me to security."

"That's ridiculous, Foster, When Nixon or the White House accuses the House committee of going on a fishing expedition, they're not talking about fishing."

"What are they talking about?" he demanded.

"They're talking about the House asking for records and tapes that they have no business "Well, why don't they just say

"Well, I guess the first image that comes to mind is someone sitting there holding a pole in his hand who doesn't know what he's doing."

"You sec. That means if you go fishing you're stupid," Foster

"Not necessarily. It could also mean you're trying to get some poor defenseless fish to bite on your hook."

* * *

"That's even worse," Foster yelled angrily. "Fishing is one of the greatest sports in the world. You don't harm anyone. You don't bother anyone. You sit there with your thoughts and you forget all about the mess they made of everything in Washington. Why did they have to drag dirty politics into fishing?"

"I guess because the White House feels that if the American people feel the House committee is on a fishing expedition, they'll believe Congress is up to no good. After all, Foster, most people do think fishing is an asinine way to pass the time."

Foster was livid. "It is not a stupid way to pass the time and if all those people who got messed up in Watergate had gone fishing instead of what they did they wouldn't be in the trouble they're in today. Fishermen at least have enough sense to stay out of muck and mire."

"Those are harsh words, Foster," I said. "Look at it from Nixon's point of view. He has to use every defense he can. If he can prove Congress is just fishing, he can save himself from being impeached. After all,

"He's such a big football fan," Foster said. "Why couldn't he accuse Congress of roughing the kicker? "It's not the same thing. The one thing Americans understand is that fishing is a poor way to hook a President." "Not if you use worms for bait."

Foster chuckled at his own

Foreign Police Score 'Reckless' French Drivers

By Colin Gravois

DARIS (IHT).—A Loudon bobby, a Spanish Guardia Civil I officer, a German police commissioner, an Italian carabi-niere, a gendarme each from Belgium, Holland, Luxembourg and Switzerland, and two members of the Louisiana Highway Patrol gathered in Paris last weekend to give their opinions of French highway safety on a TV show.

Their findings: Prench drivers are reckless, given to showing off, have no respect for pedestrians.

Their recommendation: a unified, worldwide highway safety code should be implemented as soon as possible.

These professional traffic enforcement officers have been in France for two weeks, evaluating French drivers and highway safety measures. They wore their regular uniforms and brought their own motorcycles with them, They all speak

"Highway Patrol"—the literal translation of the program's name-was organized by Michel Tauriac of the ORTF to draw attention to the murderous Easter highway migrations. Rather than invite theoreticians, he wanted people who have daily contact in their own countries with traffic problems. In addition to inviting motorcycle policemen from the countries border-ing France, he thought "it would be interesting to invite a couple Prench-speaking American patrolmen. Louisiana was the natural place to find them," he said.

During their stay in France, each patrolman worked alongside a French counterpart from the Gendarmerie Nationale. For example, Capt, Russel Hébert of Baton Rouge was in Fontainebleau studying training methods while his colleague, Trooper Lina Veilion, roamed the Rennes area checking speed limits. They were empowered to issue traffic tickets and arrest offenders. Which prompted Nice Matin to warn its readers: "If you meet them on the highway, don't mistake them for movie extras, They are the real thing, authentic motords from Loui-

The confrontation of foreign patrolmen with French drivers and traffic rules produced some enlightening observations. London Metropolitan Police Sgt. Robert Carman concluded that the real traffic problems in France are to be found in cities, where pedestrians pose particular hazards. He noted numerous serious infractions at crosswalks and traffic lights which he considers the most serious of all highway sins. He thought French enforcement negligent, "In Great Britain, we judge infractions of the highway code more in relation to the danger posed to other people at the time they are committed than to abstract considerations," he said.

Jose Gonzalez-Alvarez from Spain feels, on the contrary, pedestrians sometimes do not respect drivers' rights. He was astonished at the high speeds French drivers attain. "In Spain." he said, "there are no speed limits, but the average speed is much lower than in France, which has a 140-kilometer-an-hour

The participants in the program were selected mainly for their professional competence and ability to speak French. The European patrolmen all knew France and French road con-recent revival of interest among Cajuns about their French cultural heritage intensified their desire to see France.

"We are delighted to find the land of our ancestors," they said at a press conference at Orly while waiting for their big 1200-cc Harley Davidsons to be uncrated. The French press, noting their colorful metaphors and savoureux language, was delighted, too.

Although the French spoken in Louislane nowadays is more like 18th-century Prench than what one hears today in Paris. the two Louislanians had no difficulty understanding the Parisian variety. "We communicated instantly," says Capt, Rébert. "French argot and highway jargon took a while to sink in, but my down, home expressions broke them up."

Capt. Hebert, 39, a Marine Corps veteran, former professional rodeo broncobuster, and commander of the Baton Rouge highway patrol district, feels he is qualified to judge the French gendarmes. "They are the finest in the world," he asserts. "American highway patrolmen don't approach them on on-the-job professionalism."

Contrary to popular belief, Trooper Veillon, from Ville Platte, I.a., feels that young people in France have a high respect for the gendarmes, as opposed to the flics, the regular cops. They received us everywhere with a consideration and respect uncommon in the United States," he said But he conceded that pure curiosity—"Our monstruous bikes and flamboyant uniforms were a hit everywhere"—could have influenced that friendliness.
